TY

I can't thank you enough for adding me to the list!

There are very few people that are so willing to give so much to so many...thank you for being so generous, not just for me but for everyone you have chosen to donate to.

 You Rock OtisHertz, and so do your Snow Tracks. It would be going in my garden if not for the fact that it is hermie. don't really like beans in my meds, but really like the snow tracks, doesn't screw up my ADD as trainwrecker.

😊 Green Xploder

The design came from an 18 year old doodle.

I took the old doodles from my college notes before throwing them away a few years ago and began reworking the doodles. The design on the cap is one continuous line called green xploder. I blew it up, colored it, and put it on a background that produces the optical illusion of curved lines and expansion. The straight magenta lines are supposed to appear curved. I used GIMP which is an open source sort of photoshop to further alter it and add text.

I guess I was subconsciously drawing myself because I have an injury everywhere the figure is disfigured. I think my crude art talks to me. Looking back through these doodles I can clearly identify three women of my life even though the doodles were drawn before I met them. There were a few jars that got out with a different design of a naked lady that was one of these premonition drawings. The doodle became an unfinished oil painting, it was accurate down to hair color, eye size, and body. It spooks me.

I called her Phosphorescent Bitch and altered it many times. Under the layers of paint she was once backdiving into an empty pool and falling off a building. Now she has been photoshopped (GIMPed) with digital layers that include a gas mask, boxing gloves, and a cannabis leaf for pubes. Under that sticker is another sticker with only a gas mask.

The idea of layers in art is appealing because life comes in layers. It doesn't matter to me if things are ever finished. What matters to me is that I keep up my dialouge with myself and keep adding layers to my art. I'm fairly certain I will alter these designs untill they are not recognizable. With layers the original doodle can remain beneath the visible image like an embedded baby picture or a seed. The art then lives on its own as a story.

Here is where you can get a windows installer for this free program:

From a Grateful Random Stranger

Otis, thanks again for your generosity. It struck me from the beginning that it was a interesting notion. Great Bud and a very cool jar - a real keeper. I hope that people respect your right to donate meds any way you wish, even to random strangers. I, for one, appreciated it. I think I'll check-out the image viewer. SLIM

 Pass it on

Thanks,

I guess we are not really random strangers. Strangers maybe but not random. We all have a common reason for being here and a state permit attesting to our medical need. Not only that, our program requires us to give freely without conditions. We cannot accept money and even explicit trades are disallowed. This way of open donation is a manifestation of the program.

I hope that others will do their own Bud Bombs.

Growers can't take money for meds but they can build a reputation. Reputation is akin to brand. A brand built in advance of dispensaries could be a valuable thing. This thread got a lot of attention for less than $100 and four jars of buds.

Dispensaries are going to have to fill their shelves with something. It is intentional these donations look like something that might be stocked on a shelf. If there are dispensary shelves one day to stock I hope to get some shelf space. I hope that I share those shelves with other OGFers. It is the members of this community who should own the industry.

I do not think this admission of my future expectations in any way dilutes my personal reasons for doing this or how probably someone who really needed this got it without having to beg. The reasons compliment eachother. It goes without saying that free meds for cardholders makes them feel good. The gain for a grower is you can build a brand that will compensate you later if things change along the lines of our hopes.

I hope our growers organize donation campaigns. I only have been growing since June with two 5x5 tents in an apartment. Imagine what someone with four cards and a good reputation could do not only to build a brand but to fill med requests.

There are already ways in place here at OGF for OGF growers to build brands like contributing knowledge in the threads and contests. This that I did is another way. Others will surely come later with big money to force corporatized brands on people. Hell I can foresee a day when mainstream drugstores corner the dispensary business. It would be seriously no big surprise. Brands can survive. We as a community can gain advantage in any future industry by building our brands. We can hack our own community for our own benefit.

Anyone who wishes may take these ideas and run with them. I think this could be a net gain for all involved. I see the possibility for many brands to come out of this. A union could come out of this. A change in public sentiment could come out of this. Possibly some unforeseen bad things could even come out of this. Maybe it could somehow even help the push for dispensaries by putting our meds in packaging.

I want to encourage debate now about this approach and the merit of the idea of using donations to build brand now in anticipation it could possibly be monetized later if our dreams come true. I'd like to turn this forum over to those who have opinions about what I did so they can express them. I am very curious to here what people think about my experiment.

Muaahahahaha!

Four19, I'll match that five ounces!

You are welcome to join me in less than three weeks for a Christmas Bud Bomb. You could supply your own art to me for your own caps.

Any serious reputable grower is welcome to join my Xmas open donation with their pride and joy. I can make different caps for everyone and provide the jars. I'd have to get with you about the cost. The turnaround for jars and caps is about a week so you have about a week from now to join and supply art.

We could do this one together and perhaps some would continue with their own packaging and bombs. We could also have a questionnaire online to mine the recipients for info on alleviated ailment by strain and other stuff that matters. They could also rate the strains.

Big compliment

Tulip,

I take that as a huge compliment and I'm sure whoever came up with that strain would too.

You should put it in one of those catnip balls and string it around your husband's neck to see what he does! 🤪 wow bro this bud is potent so thanks a lot for the donation otis wish nothing but the best for you by the way this stuff compared to the early version you donated me is just as good and taste is great; difference is this stuff plays with my head. i like it a lot early version put me to sleep this version makes me goofy up beat & tolerable
