Plastic Elephant Watering Can

Every plant I have ever grown has been watered with this pink elephant that was given to me when I quit drinking and started growing plants. It used to be much brighter but was bleached by the Sun.

I took cuttings from public gardens, home depot, yards, and parks. A couple friends and I had a fondness for persistent weird weeds and ended up with collection of a half dozen amazing indestructible fern and succulent plants that grew on seemingly nothing.

In the evening on the porch where I used to drink beer and smoke cigars I then smoked pot and grew plants. My porch filled with plants and friends who joined me and life got richer for the change.

The elephant fits snug in the four gallon bucket I use for nutrient mixes. One shake seems to have provided enough aeration over the years. The small nozzle and half gallon capacity ensured that I watered slowly enough. I could never find one in this size that was shaped to function better at scooping water from a bucket. Also, it never broke. Still has two functioning googly eyes!

Elephant was so utilitarian that I stopped seeing it as a silly pink elephant. Mostly I stopped seeing it at all. It was a tool. It was invisible until someone commented on it and everyone commented on it. The other day I got to thinking this plastic elephant is the one tool that has the most intimate contact with my plants and I hardly notice it.

I like how things age and tell their story in the patina of wear. My bucket is left over from my first business that I sold 12 years ago. I could get a new bucket with a better handle but this bucket has meaning. This bucket has been along for the ride. This bucket stays on the truck.

Objects get imbued with sentiment over time. These two simple disposable plastic and pvc tools changed my life and I would like to thank them.

I took a bunch of pictures at various exposure compensations with a tripod while shining a flashlight through the back then created an animated gif with this free program:

<http://download.cnet.com/FastStone-1...ml?tag=lst-0-1>

Afterwards I posted it on photobucket then dragged the image over from the photobucket web page into the text editor.

Can I get a "Praise to the ele-can?"

For those new to this the jars are 2" x 1.7", made of glass and hold maybe five or six grams.

I think ur Ele-Can is Awesome!!! The fact that it used to be pink makes it even more cool! It's amazing how a person can become attached to something so normal/mundane I feel that way about a Troll doll I got in high school that has a tshirt with Gresham Gophers on it. It's way special but only I will ever know the reason why 😊...

You are too kind.

They were all my first time with the strain. Probably purpit2 will be involved, some cheese. I have a little g-13 to give out. Some are going to be better than others. BC sweet pink grapefruit is good and smokable but tastes nothing like it is supposed to compared to Longtoke's bud who gave me the cut. Things may have gotten a little weird there with my vacuum experiments.

I have all different color labels like are flashing above so I will put multiple strains in there, post the color code, and let luck sort it out.

ALWAYS better to have an Ele-Can instead of an Ele-Can't!!

😊 The imtohi exception

Feel bad about leaving Charlie out but rules are rules and he has been growing for 65 years.

However, I have lots of extra jars and a solution.

If you are a grower you can have an empty Ele-Can jar if you:

1. Post a picture of your watering can.

👍 Just beautiful

It does my heart good to see such an awesome garden tool.
Happily I have no need to Praise to the Ele-Can!
but admire your inventiveness in your donations to the community.

Please DO NOT put me on your list...(well your friends list would be OK).
I just wanted to say HIGH and Thanks for being here!

A picture of my can

Praise to the Ele-Can!

Yeeeah, I like my new watering can because unlike my old one, it doesn't leak, and I can take the white part off to thoroughly clean my can. Oh yeah, thanks for hooking up a new Avatar for me.

the jar is cool! since I am a grower and not a part of the bud bomb do I have to be there in person to pick up my jar or can I have someone pick it up for me?

so otis, when are you going to write a book? I love your first post...
